Got a cell phone? You're probably paying too much

Chicago Tribune

Mobile phone users in Illinois are paying hundreds of extra dollars every year for unused minutes and unnecessary services, the Citizens Utility Board said in a report released Monday.

CUB studied 4,400 cell bills entered into its online Cellphone Saver between August 2009 and July 2010 and determined that those consumers are overpaying by an average of $359 a year.

The Cellphone Saver lets users can upload a PDF of their wireless bill from one of the five major carriers—AT&T, Verizon Wireless, Sprint, T-Mobile and U.S. Cellular—and receive a report about how to cut costs.

CUB conducted a similar study in 2009, analyzing 6,985 bills. Last year, the lost savings added up to an average of $331 a year.

The culprits identified by CUB remain largely unchanged from last year. CUB Executive Director David Kolata said wasted minutes continue to be an issue, with consumers averaging more than six hours of unused calling time every month because even plans with the lowest amount of minutes are too big for typical use.

The other common problems are paying for extra services that may not be a good value, such as insurance, directory assistance and roadside assistance. In addition, CUB said consumers unwittingly opt into programs that tack monthly recurring charges onto their bills, often for downloads such as ringtones and wallpapers.

Kolata said consumers that use fewer than 300 minutes of calling time a month could be better served by switching to a prepaid wireless provider.

That is so rude

Americans shadier when it comes to texting, new study says

Chicago Tribune

Next time your friend reads a text message while sitting with you at a restaurant, tell him he's rude. And tell him he's like a typical American.

Those statements likely would be true, given the results of a Marquette University study that compared the texting habits of cell phone users in the world's two largest democracies—the U.S. and India.

In monitoring text messages from 137 college students in both countries, the study showed that India appeared to have better "textiquette." Researchers found that 52 percent of the Americans in the study read text messages while in public social settings such as restaurants, shops and movie theaters, compared with only 5 percent of Indian participants who read texts while out. Most Indians (41 percent) read texts while at home or at a friend's home.

Americans also were seven times more likely than Indians to send texts from social settings (42 percent vs. 6 percent); and almost eight times as likely to text while in the middle of a conversation (31 percent vs. 4 percent).

Still, Robert Shuter, the Marquette communication studies professor who led the study, cautioned not to be too down on American texters.

"The truth is, neither Indians nor Americans excused themselves or took leave when they read or sent a message. They're both at fault," he said, adding that the point of the study was to emphasize how different cultural factors must be considered when developing universal texting rules.

Maybe he's right. Indians did rudely rank 10 percentage points higher than Americans in using swear words in texts.

Researchers found that 52 percent of the Americans in the study read text messages while in public social settings, compared with only 5 percent of Indian participants.

News bite

According to the 2011 Zagat dining survey released last week, diners are saying, "No thanks" to texting at the table.

Respondents to the 32nd annual survey, which bases its ratings for some 2,100 metropolitan eateries on more than 41,000 diners' individual reviews, gave the thumbs down to such increasingly common 'while-dining' activities as talking on cell phones, texting/tweeting and e-mailing.

They did not mind the growing popularity of using phones to photograph food, as long as it was done in moderation. REUTERS

Let's all play the CTA name game

The CTA board voted last week to change the name of the Library-State/Van Buren stop in the Loop to the Harold Washington Library-State/Van Buren stop after some riders lobbied the board to honor Chicago's first black mayor.

The adjustment now gives that stop the honor of having the longest CTA rail station name, a title previously held by the Conservatory-Central Park Drive stop on the Green Line.

The CTA said it generally names stations by the nearest cross street or intersection or by the closest attraction (Merchandise Mart on the Brown and Purple lines and Cermak-Chinatown on the Red Line).

"I think it's long overdue," CTA president Rich Rodriguez said about the library stop change, which will cost the CTA about $19,000 in new signs. With all the talk about station names, Going Public looks at some stops that should modify their monikers.

RIDER'S BLOCK

My pledge to ride every CTA bus line continues. I rode the No. 121-Union/Wacker Express last week and boiled my review down to a tweet. Check out photos at redeyechicago.com/busride.

» @tracyswartz
 19 min from Navy Pier to Union Station. Rush hour sked. Navy Pier stop hidden among trees. Bus, which runs on Lower Michigan, fills quickly.

Next up:
 No. 136-Sheridan/LaSalle Express.

On the Western front: Confusion abounds when one name is used to describe three different stations. For example, there's an Addison stop on the Red, Blue and Brown lines, so the color of the lines has to be mentioned when describing those stations.

Western, too, is the name for multiple stations: one on the Brown, Orange and Pink lines, and—inexplicably—two on the Blue Line. There's a Western Blue Line stop on the O'Hare Branch in Logan Square and one on the Forest Park Branch on the Near West Side.

Couldn't the CTA change the name of the station in Logan Square to Milwaukee/Western? How about the Pabst Blue Line stop? Anything but Milwaukee's Best.

Pick a side: The station closest to U.S. Cellular Field is called Sox-35th, but the stop closest to Wrigley Field on the Red Line is called Addison. The Addison stop, which opened in 1900, predates the Cubs. Still, tourists probably could benefit from having Cubs in the station name. Stop, Cubs, Stop, anyone?

Center of attention: Now that Washington has his name on a stop, will former Gov. Jim Thompson be the next to see his name in dim fluorescent lights? The Clark/Lake stop is connected to the Thompson Center, but considering Illinois politics, perhaps the CTA should avoid state government names.

Free rides

Riders can take the CTA for free, thanks to Bruce Willis. Summit Entertainment will be handing out free single-use fare cards this week during morning rush hour at the Grand Red Line stop to promote the new Willis and Helen Mirren CIA movie, "Red."

(all I ever wanted) Gaycation

Chicago's in the running as one of the best gay destinations in a new contest—here's why

By Georgia Garvey | REDEYE

The gay traveler is a highly desired commodity.

While, of course, every traveler is different, gay and lesbian tourists have a reputation for being the kind of traveler a tourism bureau salivates over, according to industry experts. They often hit a city with a full agenda and money to spend.

"We're cutting back and the times are tough, but we're still going to travel," said John Polly, editor-in-chief of tripoutgaytravel.com. "That's one of the main ways we like to spend our money." Polly said many gay tourists often want to experience cultural sites, fine dining and nightlife hotspots, all in one visit. "Once we go to a city, we like to really take part in what a city has to offer."

About 45.6 million visitors flocked to Chicago in 2009, according to the Chicago Convention and Tourism Bureau. Gay visitors are estimated to have spent $63.3 billion in the U.S., according to Community Marketing Inc., which surveys lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender people. Community Marketing's 2010 report also found that Chicago was the most-visited U.S. site for business in 2009 and in the top five for leisure travel in the country.

The city recently was nominated for best U.S. destination in the Trip Out Gay Travel awards; online voting in the competition runs through Monday. Boystown bar Roscoe's was nominated in the "best gay bar in the world" category. Both were selected by a panel of 20 writers and editors who cover LGBT affairs.

"We're extremely honored. Chicago is a fantastic city," said Brenden Chrisman, general manager at Roscoe's, who acknowledged Roscoe's since has been recruiting votes on social media and in the bar. "I think we're doing a little campaigning."

"Chicago's actually always been a hotspot for the gay and lesbian traveler. It's a vibrant, unique urban setting," said John Tangelo, president of the International Gay and Lesbian Travel Association, which is based in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. He said Chicago kind of has it all, from the slew of major-league sports teams to the world-class shopping.

"Having lived in L.A. and New York, I love Chicago ... It's the life of New York City at a lesser pace," said Arnie Cuarenta, general manager for the Chicago Gay Men's Chorus, one of many Chicago entertainment options geared toward the LGBT set. "It's a beautiful city. There's so much life, whether you're gay or straight."

OUT AND ABOUT

Where do Chicago's gay vacationers go when they're angling to get out of town? John Tanzella, president of the International Gay and Lesbian Travel Association, and John Polly, editor-in-chief of tripoutgaytravel.com, gave us some of their picks of the current and soon-to-be hot spots.

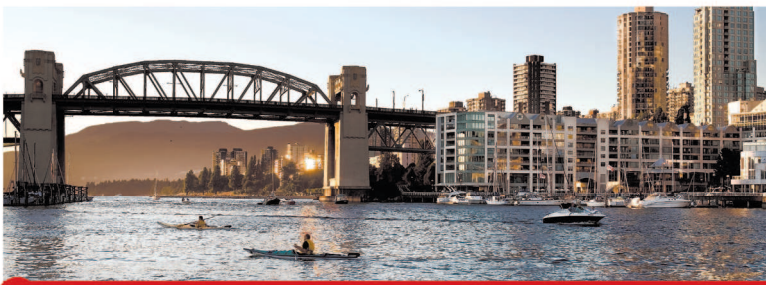

1 New York

A perennial favorite, New York has it all, Tanzella says. There's art, music, food and bars, and it's the kind of domestic destination that can be more affordable than jet-setting to Paris.

2 Puerto Vallarta/Mexico City

"Puerto Vallarta has always been a gay tourist destination," Tanzella says, with beachfront landscape and cultural appeal. But after gay marriage became legalized in Mexico City, the nation has reportedly made a push to win over a whole new subset of LGBT travelers: gay honeymooners.

4 Vancouver and other Canadian destinations

From film festivals to fine dining, events in Canadian cities challenge the U.S.'s cultural bragging rights in many arenas. And same-sex weddings are relatively old hat in our neighbor to the north, where they've been legal for five years.

5 Tel Aviv

"It's known for kind of a sexy beach scene," Polly says, and Israel gives gay travelers the chance to relax "a little more off the beaten path." It's not in full-fledged gay paradise mode yet, but it's burgeoning, he said.

BEST U.S. DESTINATION NOMINEES

1 Chicago

2 Fort Lauderdale

3 Philadelphia

4 Las Vegas

5 Provincetown, Mass.

6 San Francisco

BEST GAY BAR IN THE WORLD NOMINEES

- 1 Roscoe's, Chicago
- 2 The Abbey, West Hollywood, Calif.
- 3 Club Mañana, Puerto Vallarta, Mexico
- 4 The Round-Up Saloon, Dallas, Texas
- 5 Royal Vauxhall Tavern, London, England
- 6 The Week International, Brazil (three locations: Rio, Sao Paulo and Florianopolis)

3 Rio de Janeiro, Brazil

Also Buenos Aires in Argentina and other South American destinations

These are the classics, Tanzella and Polly agree. Aggressively marketed by their countries as gay-friendly, they boast a mix of city nightlife and cultural jaunts, with plenty of historical destinations to fulfill any kind of agenda.

6 Florida

Palm Springs always has been popular with gay travelers, but Polly says even cities such as Fort Lauderdale, once known for bikini-clad college revelers, are getting in on the mix. He said they're trying to rebrand themselves as "not full of drunken teens on spring break." In fact, on a recent trip to the city, Polly said he was impressed by the quality of the accommodations. "The hotels they have down there on the beach are really swanky."

CHICAGO HOT SPOTS

Residents already know Chicago's teeming with recreation spots for every type of tourist, and gay travelers are no exception. Here are just a few LGBT-themed events and activities that can make a visit to the Windy City worthwhile. GEORGIA GARVEY AND ALYSSE DALESSANDRO, REDEYE; TRIBUNE FILE PHOTOS

Hollywood Beach

Yes, North Avenue Beach gets all the attention, but Hollywood Beach (5200 N. Lake Shore Drive) gets all the eyeballs. Known as the spot to see and be seen in your Speedo, Hollywood, aka Kathy Osterman Beach, teams with hotness on Chicago's sunniest days. It's past beach weather now (for the most part) but once the temps rise, beachcombers will return to the sandy shores.

Madonna-rama

Boystown's Berlin Nightclub (954 W. Belmont Ave.) pays tribute to Madonna the first Sunday of every month with a dance party. DJ Riley York brings a night composed entirely of the Material Girl's songs, with a playlist ranging from unreleased tracks to live mixes. Obsessed Madge fan Xander Conklin, 23, of the West Loop, said, "For me, it's all about that moment around 1 or so in the morning when you're in the middle of the dance floor ... just dancing to one song after another."

Theater

There's Broadway in Chicago, with shows such as "Wicked" and "Billy Elliot: The Musical" to make you feel like you're on the Great White Way. Or, if sketch comedy is more your thing, Chicago's Second City has spawned more "SNL" members than you can shake a stick at. For off-the-beaten-path LGBT fare, the Salsation Theatre Company offers "It Takes a Village, People!" on Saturdays through Nov. 6 at the Gorilla Tango Theatre (1919 N. Milwaukee Ave).

Chances Dances

It's an LGBT-fest at Subterranean (2011 W. North Ave.) on the third Monday of the month. The event has gotten so popular it expanded with two more monthly Chances-themed parties, for gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender folks to come together, at the Hideout and Danny's. Ethan White, one of Chances' six organizers, called the event an "inclusive safe space for all gender expressions, identifications [and] sexualities." He added, "Basically, everyone is welcome at Chances, with the proviso that they are respectful of everyone else." The music ranges from pop and disco to Fleetwood Mac and "anything that gets a crowd moving," according to White.

Women and Children First

It's ladies night during "Sappho's Salon: A Provocative Night of Lesbian Diversions" every third Saturday at this Andersonville haunt (5233 N. Clark St.), but the bookstore offers more than just one kind of event. The store is devoted to local authors and the LGBT community, making it a bibliophile's paradise.

Northalsted Market Days

It's special. Don't believe us? People come from pretty far away to visit this summer street fair, as evidenced by Tanzella, who makes his way from Florida for the event. "That's one of the more popular events in North America" for gay travelers, he said. "That time of year is just so beautiful in Chicago." Market Days will be Aug. 13-14 on North Halsted Street from Belmont Avenue to Addison Street.

The Gay and Lesbian International Film Festival

Sundance and Cannes have nothing on us. After 30 years, the festival is going strong at four venues, including the Music Box Theatre (3733 N. Southport Ave.) and Chicago Filmmakers (5243 N. Clark St.). Expect 50 films ranging from documentaries to shorts Nov. 4 to 13. Where else can you chaps and motor-cycle cap sharing the sidewalks of Michigan Avenue with a woman in a power suit and pumps. But it's exactly that scene that becomes reality for one weekend in May, when leathermen invade the Hyatt Regency (151 E. Wacker Drive). The conference centers on the crowning of an "International Mr. Leather," and with events like "Pecs & Personality" and the "Black and Blue Ball," it's a cheeky bit of camaraderie.

Chicago Gay Men's Chorus

In 2011, the chorus will have its 30th anniversary, and it has plenty to celebrate. You can see the chorus perform all over, singing the national anthem at a Chicago Cubs game and performing around holiday time as per tradition. Wherever they are, though, they're aiming to inspire as well as entertain, says Arnie Cuarenta, general manager for the chorus. "We're not just a stand-and-sing group," he said.

watch a movie where the audience boos when a male character tries to earn the affections of a leading lady?

It's not every day you see a man in leather

The many restaurants

It'll be easier to find restaurants you'd like to try than it will be to narrow down your list of choices in Chicago. Go fancy, go hole-in-the-wall, go wherever you'd like, but diners who want to support some of the city's most well-known gay chefs can pencil in Hearty (3819 N. Broadway) or Table 52 (52 W. Elm St.). Just make sure you've got reservations.

Gov. Quinn (center) shakes hands with union members in Chicago on Monday, the first day of early voting. E. JASON WAMBSGANS/TRIBUNE

Off to the races

Thinking of voting early for next month's elections? You're in luck

Chicago Tribune

From Chicago's Columbus Day parade route to rallies held across the state, Monday marked the first day of early voting for the Nov. 2 election—a point where politicians shift from primarily concentrating on hard-fought, TV-driven campaigns to focus on the nitty gritty of cranking out the vote.

"One more than the other guy is a landslide in my book," Democratic Gov. Pat Quinn told reporters following a rally at the Pipefitters Local 597 union hall in Chicago, the launch pad for a half-dozen rallies he was leading throughout the state aimed at encouraging early turnout. On Tuesday, Vice President Joe Biden was scheduled to keynote another rally for Quinn in Chicago.

Republican governor candidate Bill Brady rushed to Chicago from a downstate bus tour and strode a parade review route along Columbus Drive to tell potential supporters they should vote now.

Early voting has taken on added significance since it was launched four years ago. Fueled by hometown candidate Barack Obama's presidential candidacy, local election officials said pre-Election Day votes amounted for more than one in five city and suburban Cook County ballots cast in fall 2008.

But the campaigns also have taken advantage of a new quirk in election law that moves Illinois closer to voting by mail. The change removed the requirement for absentee voters to give a reason why they would not be able to vote in person on Election Day. Late last month, campaigns sought to exploit the change to launch early voting even earlier.

Democrats and Republicans each sought to motivate voters by raising the specter of unpopular opposition leaders.

U.S. Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) criticized attack ads aimed at U.S. Senate nominee Alexi Giannoulias by a group co-founded by former President George W. Bush's White House political guru Karl Rove.

Giannoulias' Republican rival, five-term North Shore U.S. Rep. Mark Kirk, told supporters in Joliet they needed to get out the vote so he could stop the Democratic agenda of House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, of California.

Baby's got a lucky number

Chicago Tribune

For every mom who delivers a newborn baby, the infant is a perfect 10.

But Nathaniel David Henze Milan has the numbers to back it up.

Nathaniel was born at 10:10 p.m., Oct. 10, 2010 (10-10-10) at Edward Hospital in Naperville.

"What gets me most is the time," said mother Autumn Henze, 19, of Sugar Grove. "I kept seeing on the news that [Sunday was] supposed to be the luckiest day of the year. But the time—how often does that happen?"

Her boyfriend and the baby's father, DeAndre Milan, and her mother, Karla Bowman, shared a glance when they noticed the symmetrical timing of Nathaniel's arrival. Henze, who believes numbers have special, lucky meanings, also realized it following Sunday's delivery.

"It clicked in my head after I came back to Earth," she said.

The streak of 10s ended when young Nathaniel was placed on the scale. He didn't weigh 10 pounds, 10 ounces, but instead checked in at a healthy 8-6.

Still, he'll now have one of the easiest dates of birth to remember.

Dr. Scott Kagan, the obstetrician who delivered the baby, said some people prefer certain birthdays for their children.

"Usually New Year's Eve is the main one," he said.

Oprah not happy with abuse verdict

Oprah Winfrey on Monday said she was not satisfied with the acquittal of a woman accused of abusing students at the her South African girls school.

Tiny Virginia Makopo, 30, was found not guilty of allegations that she improperly touched several teenage girls when she was a matron at the campus near Johannesburg soon after it opened in 2007, the South African Press Association reported Monday.

"We began this child molestation trial in July 2008," Winfrey said in a written statement. "More than two years later, I am profoundly disappointed at the outcome of the trial."

Winfrey—who has spoken publicly about abuse she suffered as a child—became personally involved in the abuse investigation after a student reported the alleged abuse in October 2007. CNN

Apparent murder-suicide in Edgewater

A man and a woman died Monday after being shot on the street in Edgewater in an apparent homicide-suicide, police said. The shooting occurred about 3:20 p.m. at the intersection of North Sheridan Road and West Granville Avenue.

Mystery still surrounds Chicago serial killer case

Chicago Tribune

On a cool October day in 1983, Henry Hansen and his wife, Gladys, returned to an Indiana farm where for years they'd had luck finding mushrooms sprouting under the old oak trees.

But this time they found something else entirely—two skulls lying together north of a dilapidated barn off Route 41 just across the Illinois state line in Newton County, records show.

Police soon found the remains of four young men—all with their pants around their ankles, one with hands and head severed—and eventually determined the barn had been used as a torture chamber by serial killer Larry Eyler.

Eyler, a Chicago house painter, confessed to 21 slayings before dying in prison in 1994 of AIDS-related complications. He was on death row in Illinois for the 1984 murder of Danny Bridges, a 15-year-old Uptown prostitute whose dismembered body was discovered when a suspicious janitor cut open a trash bag outside Eyler's Rogers Park apartment building. Three decades later, at least four young men Eyler confessed to slaying in Illinois and Indiana remain unidentified. Two Indiana coroners working near the Illinois border hope to change that, recently launching efforts to identify three of them using DNA.

The Cook County medical examiner's office, which the Tribune has reported had one unidentified victim, did not respond to requests for comment.

The Indiana coroners plan to submit the DNA samples to a national criminal database and missing-person databases, and also use the DNA to compare to samples from families who believe the victims might be their missing loved ones.

Eyler primarily was a "rage killer" who murdered hitchhikers or young men he picked up in bars after quarreling with his married boyfriend, said Kathleen Zellner, the Oak Brook attorney who handled his appellate case and then found herself, over hundreds of hours, coaxing him to give details of all the murders. A Hollywood film on the story reportedly is being developed.

CTA union officials give driver's story of bus crash

Chicago Tribune

The CTA bus driver involved in a weekend crash on South Lake Shore Drive is disputing some passenger accounts that at least one rider grabbed the steering wheel to help her recover control of the bus after it pulled hard to the right and eventually veered off the road.

Video taken from a camera on the bus supported the driver's statement that no passengers were involved in steering the vehicle, CTA officials said Monday.

About three dozen passengers were injured when the bus slammed into a tree Saturday, officials said.

The 57-year-old female driver, who recently was reinstated after being laid off in February as part of CTA cost-cutting moves, said she was driving on southbound Lake Shore Drive just past McCormick Place when the front wheels of the bus started pulling hard to the right, according to officials with Amalgamated Transit Union Local 241.

She said she tried to muscle the bus to go left, but it kept veering right—as if the power steering line ruptured—and the vehicle then jumped the curb at about 40 mph, union officials who interviewed the driver said.

"She hit the brakes as the bus was careening right, but when it went over the curb the impact caused her to lose her footing and she stated that she may have accidentally hit the accelerator," said Carlos Acevedo, a union board member.

The CTA is scheduled to interview the driver Tuesday.

Study: More than half of Chicago Catholic parishes have had accused priests

Chicago Tribune

More than half of Chicago's Roman Catholic parishes have had a priest at some point who was accused of sexually abusing a child, according to a study released Monday.

In some cases, multiple priests accused of misconduct worked at the same church, according to the study, conducted by reform groups Voice of the Faithful, African American Advocates for Victims of Clergy Sexual Abuse and the Survivors Network of those Abused by Priests. A spokeswoman for the Archdiocese said she had not seen the report and could not comment.

"In almost 60 percent of the parishes, an accused predator worked there," said Barbara Blaine, president of SNAP.

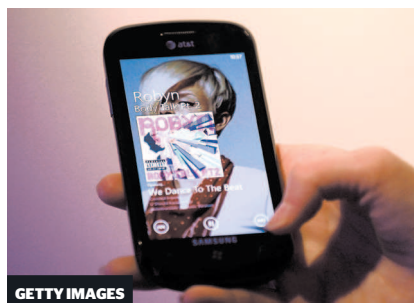

From 1980 to 1990, 57.7 percent of Chicago parishes had an accused priest working there, said Bob Kopp, one of the study's researchers and vice president of Chicagoland Voice of the Faithful. Other decades examined in the study had similar percentages of affected parishes, he said.

For five years, members of the reform groups combed through The Official Catholic Directory and a database of accused, admitted and convicted priests created by Boston-based bishopaccountability.org. Sixty five of the accusations have been substantiated by the Archdiocese of Chicago. The other 32 accusations came from media reports and lawsuits that have been filed.

In the Chicago area, the group documented the assignments of 97 priests, from 1917 to 2009, accused of sexual abuse.

BLACKHAWKS 4, BUFFALO 3

Points of pride

Hawks-Sabres game features plenty of Olympic flavor

RedEye

In addition to the Hawks collecting their first win of the season, Monday's game at Buffalo featured an Olympic reunion of sorts. Between the two teams, nine players who represented their respective countries in the Vancouver Games played Monday: Ryan Miller and Patrick Kane from the U.S.; Jonathan Toews, Duncan Keith and Brent Seabrook from Canada; Marian Hossa, Tomas Kopecky and Andrej Sekera from Slovakia; and Jochen Hecht from Germany. So, which players can wave their nation's flag with their heads held highest after this one? RedEye hands out medals accordingly.

GOLD

Slovakia

Taking full advantage of two breakaway opportunities against Miller, Hossa notched a pair of goals for the Hawks to give him three on the young season. He also was plus-3 on the night. Kopecky contributed an assist, though he and Hossa each spent two minutes in the penalty box. Sekera, a Sabres defenseman, played more than 18 minutes but did not crack the score sheet.

SILVER

USA

Buffalo native Patrick Kane scored a power-play goal to get the Hawks on the board and fired five shots on goal. However, he was minus-2 for the game. As for Miller, he took the loss for the Sabres, turning aside 26 of the 30 shots he faced for an .867 save percentage. To his credit, he did deny Kane on a two-on-one and Jack Skille on a breakaway.

BRONZE

Canada

Keith and Seabrook were on the ice for the first two Sabres goals, which they scored before the game was even three minutes old. Keith did have an assist on Kane's goal, and Toews registered a plus-3 on the night and had a pair of shots on goal.

'Lucky' better than sucky

The ugliest 4-1 team in NFL history. That's the pro football intelligentsia's take on the 2010 Bears. Because they beat Detroit on a technicality, Green Bay blew its chances on penalties and Carolina is so terrible, the Bears truly deserve to be 1-4.

A valid line of reasoning? OK. Let's go ahead and give the Cubs the 2003 NL pennant, too. The New England Patriots basically were perfect in 2007, so one stupid helmet catch shouldn't spoil the 19-0 record we all know should rightfully exist. And those two NBA titles the Houston Rockets won while MJ was whiffing on curveballs? Make it a revisionist eight-peat, baby!

It works in non-sports situations, too. Did you vote Democrat in the 2000 presidential election? Turns out Al Gore really did win! Rocky never lost at the end of any of his movies. And "Rocky V" totally didn't suck at all!

Also, the following TV and movie characters now are alive: Old Yeller, Obi-Wan Kenobi, FBI Agent Renee Walker. Wendy Peffercorn actually said "yes" to your prom invitation, and you're now married with two kids and live in Palatine. And I can't wait for the thrilling intensity of our hometown 2016 Summer Olympics!

Good NFL teams tend to win games they shouldn't; mediocre NFL teams give away games they should have won. It's the nature of pro football. And although I would agree that the Bears offense needs to improve (36 hits to the quarterbacks in five games?!), they've got a top-five defense and solid special teams. That's certainly enough to win 10 or 11 games with their schedule. And with Aaron Rodgers concussed and Brett Favre about to be suspended (yeah, I said it), we're looking at a playoff-bound Bears team.

The 2008 Arizona Cardinals limped into the postseason at 9-7 and having won the worst division in NFL history. Yet they came within 35 seconds and a ridiculous Antonio Holmes TD catch of hoisting the Lombardi trophy. Would they have been the "worst Super Bowl champs ever"? Maybe. But I'd take "worst champs" over "best stats" every single time.

1 What could Jay Cutler tell Aaron Rodgers about dealing with a concussion?	First sack, your head feels like Jell-O. Ninth sack, all you'll be eating is Jell-O.	Jdughdklgijghsj	"That's one shot of Patron, no, wait ... OK, yeah right ... OK, one shot of Patron ..."	Plenty—if he could remember any of it.	Go for treatment in "The Hills."

3 Who's the biggest surprise of the NFL so far this season?	Whoever that impostor is posing as Drew Brees.	The Bears have a quarterback controversy.	The Bears by far. They're 4-1 (FOUR AND ONE). Wow! Don't wake 'em up!	The Bears' offensive line. They lasted almost seven halves of football before getting Jay Cutler hurt.	Samurai Mike. His team is 0-5.

Bears quarterback Jay Cutler sat out Sunday's game because of lingering effects from a concussion. NUCCIO DINUZZO/TRIBUNE

Cutler on the cusp?

Smith optimistic Bears' No. 1 quarterback will start vs. Seattle on Sunday

Lovie Smith wasn't ready to shake up the depth chart at quarterback on Monday.

A day after Jay Cutler's replacement, Todd Collins, got the hook in the third quarter, the Bears coach remained hopeful it will not matter this week how the other quarterbacks are stacked. The hope is that Cutler will return from his concussion in time to play Sunday against Seattle at Soldier Field.

"I was hopeful he would be able to play [at Carolina]," Smith said. "We're hopeful. We'll see how it goes."

Pressed for details on Cutler, Smith grew agitated. But the focus on the starter is only fair after Collins and Caleb Hanie combined to complete eight of 19 passes for 51 yards. The Bears had 29 net yards passing. It's tough to win with those kinds of numbers and usually it requires a down-and-out opponent like the Panthers.

It was the franchise's worst day passing since Rex Grossman had 34 yards passing (24 net yards) in an improbable 23-13 victory over the Vikings in a frigid and windy Dec. 3, 2006, meeting at Soldier Field.

"[Cutler] hasn't had any setbacks," Smith said. "Not going to talk about Jay anymore. There's nothing else for me to tell you about Jay. He's doing better. Wednesday we'll be able to tell you a little bit more. I got off the plane [Sunday] night, been watching video and don't know a whole lot more from that."

Cutler will need to be cleared medically before he can return to the field. He spent three days doing limited work in practice last week.

In the event Cutler cannot return, Smith will have to decide between Collins and Hanie. Offensive coordinator Mike Martz lobbied hard to get a veteran backup and finally landed that guy in Collins in late August, but it would appear the team will move Hanie up to No. 2. He completed two of three passes against the Panthers.

"There's no quarterback controversy or anything like that," Smith said. "Todd didn't play as well as he needed to finish the game and I like what Caleb was able to do coming in. We haven't made any of those type of decisions."

Bulls: No need to investigate Boozer injury

Boozer

TUESDAY'S GAME

Bulls vs. Toronto, 7 p.m. CSN

The Bulls aren't investigating Carlos Boozer's hand injury, as a published report claimed over the weekend.

What are they supposed to do, interview the gym bag Boozer said he tripped over?

Sure, some skepticism exists regarding Boozer's story. Some fans are even taking Boozer's recent divorce—which was settled amicably, by the way—and noting that his injury is called a "boxer's fracture" and adding two plus two to get five.

He punched a wall for sure!

This is for sure: Boozer's right knuckles had no cuts or swelling or redness on them when he met with team physicians following the injury, which occurred Oct. 2.

"It's a non-issue to us," coach Tom Thibodeau said. Since Boozer suffered the fractured fifth metacarpal at home on a day off, only he knows what happens for sure. He told team officials the injury occurred the same way he told reporters. Since neither the team nor media witnessed the incident, it's next to impossible to find evidence to discount Boozer's story.

Plus, the Bulls have been impressed by the professionalism and leadership Boozer has exhibited since signing his five-year, $75 million contract.

» Pitching coach Larry Rothschild picked up his option for 2011, the Cubs said Monday. Rothschild will enter his 10th season as Cubs pitching coach. The Cubs finished 13th in National League pitching in 2010 with a 4.18 ERA, after ranking in the top five in each of the three previous seasons. They also were last in walks allowed (605) and fourth in strikeouts (1,268).

» Illinois kicker Derek Dimke and quarterback Nathan Scheelhaase each was named a Big Ten player of the week for his part in the Illini's 33-13 win at Penn State. Dimke, named co-special teams player along with Purdue's Kawaan Short, made all four of his field goal attempts. Scheelhaase was named the freshman of the week after his 212 total yards of offense Saturday.

» Green Bay quarterback Aaron Rodgers (left) has a concussion and might have to sit out this week's game against Miami. Packers coach Mike McCarthy said Rodgers got the concussion during a helmet-to-helmet hit late in Sunday's overtime loss at Washington. "I know at a minimum he'll miss some practice time," McCarthy said Monday.

Barbecue's summer trend spreads into fall with this Near North Side spot serving up smoked dry-rubbed wings among 'cue specialties with house-made sauces.

"The service was great; the chef stopped by to say hello and everyone was very friendly. Our server was outstanding. Although they are a bit pricey compared to other barbecue spots, we tried the competition baby back ribs and they were incredible."

-GREEN

"I wanted to like Q; it's in my neighborhood and I love BBQ. The decor is great and the place already has something of a buzz. The server was helpful if a little over-the-top. Unfortunately the hype he gave over the smoking, spice blend etc., was sadly let down by the food."

The Heigl effect

After seeing the trailer for Katherine Heigl's movie "Life as We Know It," which opened Friday, we found ourselves asking: How does she do it? The oft-maligned starlet, whose image problem was analyzed in a recent New York Times profile, seems to favor the kind of movies that make critics cringe—and audiences open their wallets. Maybe comparing her recent movie reviews with the domestic box office numbers will hold some answers.

'27 Dresses'
(2008)

"Pretty much all of the humans in '27 Dresses' are ninnies. (In a battle of wits, those dresses would win.)"

Moira Macdonald
The Seattle Times

Box office: $76.8 million
Verdict: Moviegoers were still high off the hilarious "Knocked Up."

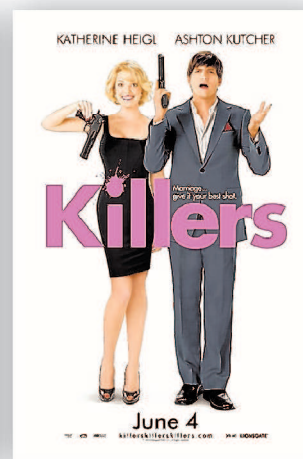

'The Ugly Truth'
(2009)

"Yet another wearying 'battle-of-the-sexes' romp that's sure to please dumb people but didn't please me."

Gregory Weinkauf
The Huffington Post

Box Office: $88.9 million
Verdict: Well, co-star Gerard Butler DOES look good without a shirt...

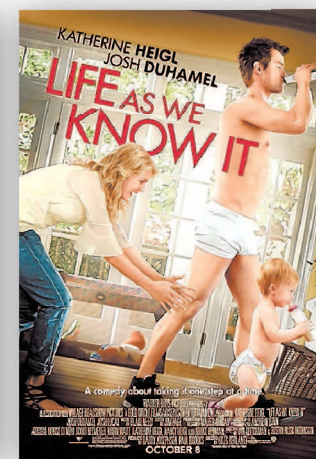

'Killers'
(2010)

"Unless you're trapped on an airplane or enjoying movie night at the penitentiary, you have no excuse for watching 'Killers.'"

Jeannette Catsoulis
The New York Times

Box Office: $47 million
Verdict: Audiences apparently have begun to wise up at this point.

'Life as We Know It'
(2010)

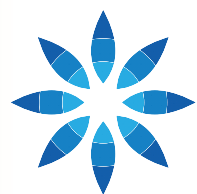

"The machine that grinded out this drool possess nothing resembling a soul. This is crap as we know it, a 113 minute package of romcom suck."

Peter Travers
Rolling Stone

Box Office: $14.6 million in first weekend
Verdict: Too early to tell, but it sure looks like a stinker.

'Idol' bride in Chicago

Crystal Bowersox (above) got married, Chicago style, over the weekend. The "American Idol" runner-up tied the knot with musician Brian Walker on Sunday at Uncommon Ground in Lakeview, where the two met six years ago, people.com reports. The couple's rings, designed by the groom, were crafted by Chicago's Traci Coughlin and Steve Quick Jewelers. Chicago Acoustic Underground's right reverend Michael Teach led the ceremony, and a laughing Buddha cake at the reception was from Bleeding Heart Bakery, people.com reports.

Grover spice

The Old Spice Guy has nothing on Grover after "Sesame Street" spoofed the popular commercials. In the bit, the towel-clad blue guy teaches kids about the word "on" using familiar catchphrases from the ads. As Grover puts it, "anything is possible when you smell like a monster and know the word 'on.'"

Minka Kelly

What flaws?

With a cover photo (left) that can only be described as smokin', Esquire pronounced "Friday Night Lights" star Minka Kelly the sexiest woman alive in its November issue. "I'm confident ... in my skin, and I'm cool with my flaws and all that stuff," Kelly, 30, said. She's confident too? Double sexy.

« THE DIGIT

That's the percentage of movie renters who prefer paranormal flicks when they watch scary movies, according to a recent Redbox survey. Slasher films were second with 31 percent of the vote, followed by zombie movies with 8 percent.

Down with the devil

Chi-town rapper GLC expects great things from his new album, "Love, Life and Loyalty," which drops Tuesday. Just don't attribute his acclaim to Illuminati. GLC is disgusted that the secretive—and some say Satanic—organization is credited with the success of artists such as Rihanna and GLC's friend and frequent collaborator, Kanye West. "[Bleep] the devil," GLC told RedEye. "I don't believe in the devil. You think I'm afraid of talking snakes or a red [bleep] talking about burning me in hellfire? Get the [bleep] out of here." » Read more from GLC at redeyechicago.com/kylesfiles.

Damon

Bourne free

A fourth Jason Bourne film, "Bourne Legacy," is in the works—but it won't include Matt Damon. "No one's replacing Matt Damon," Tony Gilroy, who directed the first three films, said, according to usatoday.com. "There will be a whole new hero, a whole new chapter. ... This is a stand-alone project." Damon, who turned 40 on Friday, will have his hands full anyway—he and very pregnant wife Luciana Barrosa are expecting their fourth child.

Cox, Arquette separate

It's a sad day in "Cougar Town." Courteney Cox and David Arquette released a statement Monday announcing their trial separation after 11 years of marriage, online.com reports. "The reason for this separation is to better understand ourselves and the qualities we need in a partner and for our marriage," the pair stated. They have one daughter, 6-year-old Coco.
